Note to the Instructor:
This lesson plan was written specifically for Texas seventh grade classrooms and provides historical context and activities for educators interested in contextualizing the Jovita Idar historical marker. We are working to expand our scope to include a wider age group and to make this lesson plan more accessible for classrooms across the country. In the meantime, we hope that instructors can adapt this curriculum to best serve the needs of their classroom. We are always looking to improve, and we welcome your feedback.

Lesson Plan Statement of Purpose:
Jovita Idar was a journalist, teacher, nurse, feminist and civil rights pioneer who fought for the rights of Mexicans and Mexican Americans living in South Texas in the early twentieth century. Throughout her life, Idar took a stand against oppression and advocated for equality and freedom. The purpose of this lesson plan is to encourage the discussion and remembrance of a local hero and to gain a better understanding of the context of Jovita Idar’s advocacy. While our nation’s history has recognized other civil rights activists, we have yet to fully recognize the accomplishments of this Laredo native or to give her proper place in our state’s historical memory.

Key Questions:
How did Jovita Idar fight for justice on behalf of Mexicans and Mexican Americans in early 20th century Texas? What should Idar be remembered for and how can we remember her and other civil rights heroes like her? How can we incorporate the study of newspaper accounts, oral histories, and local memory in Texas state history?

Texas State Standards and Skill-Based Learning Objectives:
7.6A: Identify significant individuals, events, and issues from Reconstruction through the beginning of the 20th century, including the factors leading to the expansion of the Texas frontier.

7.6B: Identify significant individuals, events, and issues from Reconstruction through the beginning of the 20th century, including the development of the cattle industry from its Spanish beginnings and the myths and realities of the cowboy way of life.

7.6C: Identify significant individuals, events, and issues from Reconstruction through the beginning of the 20th century, including the effects of the growth of railroads and the contributions of James Hogg.

7.7D: Describe and compare the civil rights and equal rights movements of various groups in Texas in the 20th century and identify key leaders in these movements.

7.8A: Create and interpret thematic maps, graphs, charts, models, and databases representing various aspects of Texas during the 19th, 20th, and 21st centuries.

7.17B: Describe the importance of free speech and press in a democratic society.

7.21A: Differentiate between, locate, and use valid primary and secondary sources such as computer software, databases, media and news services, biographies, interviews, and artifacts to acquire information about Texas.
Supplies Needed: Pens, student handouts, projector, internet connection, and teacher’s computer.

Opening Writing Prompt:
Describe the town or city you live in. What are some of the first images that come to mind? Describe the sounds, smells, popular types of foods, popular types of businesses. What are the buildings that stand out? How do people get around (car, bus, subway, walk)? What are your favorite places to visit? Try to paint a picture so that someone who has never visited your town or city can get a picture of what life is like.

Have students share descriptions with class or in small groups.

After students complete their writing prompt, broaden the focus to introduce this unit on local Texas history. Often, in order to meet the scale of national curriculum requirements, many textbooks are forced to skip over more textured local histories. This unit hopes to help students situate themselves within Texas history, and to bring to light the important work catalyzed by the Texans who came before them.

Jovita Idar Biography:
Possible script for transition: Thank you for sharing. This week’s unit will focus on the life of a woman named Jovita Idár. Have any of you heard of her? One of the exciting aspects of history is that we can learn so much about a period of time by looking at the life of a single person.

After students read aloud the brief biography of Jovita Idár, ask what the wonder or would like to learn about Idar in a KWL [Know-Wonder-Learned] chart.

FURTHER QUESTIONS
Q What questions do they have about this time period?
Q About the Idár Family?
Q Where is the students’ home town in relation to Laredo? See image 1 in the slide show (mark on map).
Q What key dates should we place on the timeline provided?

Contextualizing the Time Period:
Shift the focus to the table on the back of Idár’s biography. Students will look at immigration trends first by analyzing the static table of population shifts, then by looking at a digital map (projector needed).
Project the New York Times Interactive Immigration Explorer:

This is a helpful mapping tool to help students understand immigration trends during this time period.

1. Scroll the timeline from 1880 to 2000: What are the biggest changes you notice over time?

2. For the years 1890, 1900, and 1910: Where are the majority of people immigrating from? Who is the largest immigrant group in your state? What about in your county?

3. What information does the map leave out that you would like to know?

4. Immigration to the United States doubled from the 1890s to the 1900s. How did this impact the local population in Texas versus other states? In Laredo? In the student’s hometown?

Homework Assignment Day 1:

In preparation for Day’s Two’s classwork on the power of the press, assign an article from a local or national online newspaper for students to read.

Or, if possible, ask faculty to bring in paper copies of the local newspaper the week before so students can have their own hard copy to peruse in the evening. It is fine if the papers are from different days: the key is to ask students to see the major issues being talked about today.

Assignment: Ask students to spend 15 to 20 minutes reading through the newspaper. Each student should pick one article to read alongside the Newspaper Exploration worksheet.
Who was Jovita Idar

History is often told in broad, sweeping strokes, but in this unit, we hope to bring to light a portion of Texas history by looking specifically at the life of Jovita Idar. Over the course of four days, we will consider the tools researchers use to investigate history, from oral histories, to census data, to images long hidden in libraries, in order to consider what the past can tell us about the present.

Born and raised in Laredo, Texas, Jovita Idar (1885-1946) was a journalist, teacher, nurse, and activist who worked for the rights of the Mexican and Mexican-American population in south Texas. Jovita Idar grew up along the Texas-Mexico border during a period of major change and transition. New technology in agriculture and easier modes of transportation, such as railways, began a new chapter in the history of south Texas and northeastern Mexico. Residents of South Texas witnessed an increase of European-American immigrants. Because of this change, race relations intensified along the border. Further, in 1910, the violence of the Mexican Revolution forced many Mexicans to seek safety across the US-Mexico border. During this period in the early 1900s, those of Mexican heritage were regularly subject to unfair treatment and violence as anxiety over race increased. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of ethnic Mexicans living in Texas were unfairly killed between 1910 and 1920.

To push back against the violence, Jovita Idár and her family often wrote about the injustices they witnessed in their newspaper, La Crónica. Idar dedicated her life to addressing issues of violence, and through her writing, imagined a better world for Texas and its residents.
Laredo in 1910: “(Laredo has) a healthy and pleasant climate, an industrious and law abiding population, abundant and cheap labor, supplied with all the modern appliances for comfort, water works, electric lights, telephone exchange, costly public buildings, churches, schools, and private residences, smelters, and scapling works, ice factories, machine and car shops . . . a population of 15,000 souls and a taxable wealth of $3,000,000.” – Laredo Times, 1910

TEACHER GUIDE - DAY 2: JOVITA IDAR & THE POWER OF THE PRESS

Opening “Do Now”: Media Minute Challenge

Arrange students in groups of three to five. Have them take out their Media Minute Worksheet and review their article for a few minutes.

Students will have exactly 60 seconds to pitch to their group why their article was the most interesting. They should both relay why the content was interesting and perform their pitch in an engaging way. The teacher can model this quickly before beginning the competition.

Teacher will time 60 seconds between each student. The “winner” in each group will report to the class. (10 to 15 minutes)

Consider asking students how they hear about the news by a raise of hands. From the newspaper? From the internet? From social media? From the radio? From the television? Note how students now absorb news from different sources. (Q)

La Cronica Close Reading Circles

Today’s lesson will focus on one of the Idar Family’s newspapers, La Crónica. Read aloud with the class the Day 2 text, reiterating the terms in bold. (5-7 minutes)

An optional in-class lesson is available in the appendix. Three separate handouts with Spanish excerpts of La Crónica articles are available for students to read and discuss in groups. Guided questions are provided on the student worksheets. Have students from each group present to the class on the major issues or themes and write a list on the board. (20 minutes)

Images from the Past: Violence Printed in the Press

The following portion of the lesson deals with difficult material, and should be discussed with the class as a whole.

Based on the issues raised in the La Crónica about language, school segregation, and vigilante justice, walk students through a close reading of the two images. Note that if a student had opened the Laredo Times in 1916, they would have been faced with image 1. What questions do they have? How does the image make them feel? Most will ask about the death of the two men.

You can note that the increased Anti-Mexican sentiment at this time led to extra-legal violence, or illegal violence, that occurred outside of the justice system. (20 minutes)

Check in: Review the KWL chart. Should anything be added? Do students have new questions?

Homework Assignment: Recording Family Histories

A worksheet is provided for students to complete. They will ask an older member of their community (an older brother, parent, neighbor, grandparent) a series of questions in preparation for Day 3’s lesson on interviews and oral histories. You can give them one or two nights for this assignment,
Beginning in the late 1890s, Jovita Idar’s father, Don Nicosio Idar, began writing for his family newspaper, La Crónica. The slogan of the family newspaper was, "We work for the progress and the industrial, moral and intellectual development of the Mexican inhabitants of Texas." Soon, his three children, Jovita, Clemente, and Eduardo, joined their father as reporters for the paper. Topics such as school segregation, community safety, women’s rights, and job opportunity filled the pages of the newspaper, along with excerpts from poems and original artwork.

In 1914, Jovita Idar became in charge of La Crónica following her father’s death.

Researcher’s Tool Box: Archived Newspapers

Before the invention of the television or the widespread use of radio, many people gathered their news exclusively from the daily newspaper. As the major tool to distribute information, newspapers were quite powerful and captured both the news of the day and the opinions of many of their readers. Historians often use old newspapers as evidence because they contain the anxieties and perspectives that circulated in society at a given time. We can learn what daily life was like by closely inspecting these old news stories.

To find the old newspapers, researchers look in archives. An archive is a collection of documents or objects housed for protection in university libraries, offices, museums, and government buildings. Today, you will be able to look at a newspaper article from Jovita Idar’s newspaper, La Crónica, from the University of Texas archives.

When historians look at archived newspapers, they consider the point of view of the reporter, photographer, or artist. Sometimes, the material the historian uncovers can be difficult to understand outside of the context, or time period and location, it was written in. It is important to ask who made the text and what the author was trying convey, or tell, to the reader.
The following images were both printed in two, separate publications.

Image 1 was printed in the Laredo Times in 1916 and depicts an aspect of the unjust violence Mexicans and Mexican-Americans experienced along the border.

Family Oral History Sampler
(adapted from the UCLA Oral History Library Guide)

Oral history is a field of study and a method of gathering, preserving and interpreting the voices and memories of people, communities, and participants in past events. Though many oral histories require days to complete and hours of preparation, we will instead sample the process with a family member or friend. In the process, see if you learn something new or surprising about a person you already know well. Are there family stories that you want to archive to pass on to the next generation?

What are the first things that come to your mind when you think about your parents?

What do you remember about your grandparents?

What was school like for you? What did you like about it? What was hard about it for you?
What's the largest town or city you remember visiting when you were young? Can you describe your impressions of it?

When you were little, who was your favorite musician or movie star? Why?

What were some of your most vivid childhood memories when you were around my age?

OPENING WRITING PROMPT
Write “Texas Rangers” on the board. Ask students to brainstorm first the key words that come to mind when they hear this phrase. Then, ask where they see images of the Texas Rangers.

Potential Transition Script:
The history of the Texas Rangers intersected with the life of Jovita Idar in dramatic ways. But, before we return to the Idar family, we need to give a little backstory to the Texas Rangers between the years 1915 and 1925.

Hand out student worksheet and project images on board. Ask students to read aloud handout text.

We will be looking at competing visions of the Texas Rangers in popular culture.

Q How do images that circulated widely through television, radio, and magazines influence how we see the world?

Project image 1.
Ask what does this image say? What does it mean? What does it do?

Q What is the image’s purpose (is it trying to sell something, convey an idea, make an argument?)

Q Based on this image, what do you think are its creator’s assumptions or beliefs?

Q How might different people see this image differently?

Q How does this image make you feel?

Project image 2.
Repeat questions from Image 1.

Project image 3, which has Image 1 and Image 2 side to side.

How can such different visions of the Texas Rangers exist, and what can it tell us about Texas History?

Scholars and writers have been studying these differing viewpoints for many years.

Q What questions would you ask the creators of these images?

Q How does a drawing differ from a photograph?

Slide 4 is optional. Please see the following page to determine whether or not this image would be appropriate to discuss in your class.

Homework Reminder: Student Oral History Worksheet due tomorrow.
NOTES ON IMAGE 4:

“Do my students need to see this image?”

Images are a powerful storytelling tool, but may not be appropriate for every classroom. Before showing this image to your class, consider if your goals will be achieved without using this image. Do the oral histories, newspaper clips, political cartoons, and readings included in the lesson plan meet the needs of your students? Do your students need to see this image to understand the dynamic in early 20th century South Texas between the Texas Rangers and ethnic Mexicans?

Additionally, before showing your students this image, consider what they are bringing with them to the classroom. It is important to be aware that your students may have a personal connection to similar histories and that not all students will react to the image in the same way.

This image was found on a widely-distributed postcard from this period in time. It depicts three Texas Rangers posed in front of the dead bodies.

Facilitation Suggestions:
- Describe the image to your students before projecting it on the screen
- If any students seemed particularly affected by the image during the discussion, check in with them individually after class

Discussion Question Suggestions:
Q What strikes you about this image? Why?
Q This is a postcard that was distributed widely by the Texas Rangers. How does this affect the way you look at this image?
Q Is there anything that feels unsettling or upsetting to you about this image? Feel free to explain.
As immigration into the Texas region increased in the aftermath of the Mexican War, tensions over race, land, ownership, and assumptions about what it means to be an American began to arise. The Texas Rangers increased in size and power during this period as well. The hundreds of people of Mexican heritage killed by Texas Rangers and vigilantes between 1915 and 1919 further intensified fears of those living along the border. Vigilantes are community members who act as law enforcement without the legal authority to do so. Often, violence is used.

Today, many people are not aware of the violence that occurred during this period in time, although both the US-Mexico border, and the role of the Texas Rangers, remain hotly debated. Images of the Texas Rangers are hard to miss. Let’s think about where you see these images and the stories the images tell.

Opening Writing Prompt: Memory Test
Today, students will process aspects of the interviews they collected and listen to an oral history about the Idar Family.

But, to show how tricky oral histories and memory can sometimes be, we will begin with a quick “test.”

As students are walking into class, nonchalantly walk around the room, performing small tasks (perhaps tossing an apple, saying hi to students, opening window shades, rearrange books on desk) until all students are seated. Continue small tasks for a few seconds after the bell.

Once students are settled, tell them that their job is to as accurately as possible describe your actions, in order, as detailed as possible.

Allow them to compare notes in groups of four. Usually, students will remember differently, and debate amongst themselves which version of their memory is “correct.”

Q What is easy to remember? What is easy to forget?

(8-10 minutes)

Oral History/Interview Exchange
Ask students to take our their oral history worksheet.

Have students turn to a partner and read aloud oral history sampler responses. Pairs should answer the following questions on the back of their worksheet:

1) Write two questions you would like to ask your partner’s interviewee.

2) Were there any similarities between the person you interviewed and the person your partner interviewed?

Alternate: Create “stations” where a single question from the oral history sampler is written on a large piece of poster paper. Have students write their answers (without names) on the paper as they cycle around the room.

(15-20 minutes)

Idar Oral History: Listening to History
On the Refusing to Forget Curriculum page (insert url here), you will see an embedded oral history video under Day 4.

Explain to students that they will hear an interview with Jovita Idar’s brother, Aquilino (Ike) Idar recorded in 1984.

Listen to oral history and have students read along simultaneously.

After the first listen, ask the class about the content of the interview. Read through the transcription paragraph by paragraph and have students explain what happens in the story.

Read through the questions in the student guide together as a class and ask the students to consider these questions as they’re listening through a second time.

Q What is the tone of Ike Idar’s voice?

Q How do you think he feels based on the way he tells the story?

Q Do you think the fact that Ike and Jovita are siblings affects the way Ike remembers and describes the event? Do you think the Rangers would have told the story differently?

Q What would you like to know more about that Ike doesn’t talk about in this clip?
“And the Rangers in Laredo didn’t like it. So they went to El Progresso, and they were going to destroy everything. But it so happened that my sister was standing at the door. And she stood at the door and says, “Where are you going?” Says, “We want to go inside. Would you please step aside?” And my sister said, “No; you have to come through this door, and I’m standing here. And you cannot go...come in here because it’s against the law. If a woman stands at the door, you can’t go in.”

So they discussed among themselves, “Well, what shall we do? She’s right.” Because my father was Justice of the Peace, and he knew the law and he knew... So he told her, “You stay at the door and don’t let them go in.” So they didn’t go in that night. And so my mother was worried about my sister, because they are gonna kill her. So Daddy said, “No, they won’t kill her if she stands her ground.” So she stood there at the door... [Part of the tape erased.]

...Said, “Go tell Jovita,” my sister, “to come back home, because it’s late and I don’t think those Rangers are coming back.”

Well, they did next morning real early about 5:00 o’clock in the morning. My sister wasn’t there, so they broke the door. They had hammers and sledgehammers and things like that. And they broke the line-o-type machine, kicked the keyboard, hit the metrics...

Mrs. Idar: Las prensas. ...the press, all the type. They threw it on the floor like that - the loose type that was on the stands, they pulled all these boxes and emptied it on the floor. They wrecked everything. They broke the press. The press was worth about $17,000, $18,000. They broke the press with the sledgehammers and everything. And they broke the windows. Left them open; left the door open and everything; and they went out. But there was nothing we could do – nothing my sister could do, my father, or anybody.”

Directions: You will design your own historical marker for Jovita Idar, La Crónica, or even a personal hero in your life. Before you begin designing, answer the guiding questions below.

Who is this marker meant to be for (the living, the dead, neighbors/friends/family/tourists, future generations, etc.)?

Where will it be located? Does this location have meaning?

Why do you think it is important to have a historical marker for this event or person?

What do you want the public to know about this event or person?

What symbols would you like to incorporate in the marker? To you, what do these symbols mean.

KEEP EYE ON BORDER MEXICANS
Historical Context and Timeline

Early 1900s: Increase in the Anglo population along the Texas-Mexico border
By the early 20th century, Mexican populations were the majority in border towns along the Texas-Mexico border. In these enclaves, although much of their land had fallen into the hands of Anglos, unlike in most of the rest of the state, ethnic Mexicans voted, held office, and served on juries. Some were prominent landowners and merchants. Anglo-Americans moving into the region were more likely to adapt themselves to border society by such means as learning to speak Spanish, converting to Catholicism, and marrying into Mexican families, rather than to insist on assimilation to Anglo-Texan cultural norms.

In the early twentieth century, new railroads and road connections linked these border enclaves to the rest of Texas, inciting dramatic change. Particularly in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, at the southern tip of the state, large numbers of white Americans moved to the region for the first time, so many that the population nearly doubled within just a few years. Rising land values and the consequent increased property tax bills worked together with title disputes to strip many ethnic Mexicans of their land.

1910-1920: Mexican Revolution
Due to the Mexican Revolution, nearly a tenth of the Mexican population would perish and another tenth would flee to the United States, setting into motion a pattern of migration that endures a century later.

November 1910: Murder of Antonio Rodríguez
One such migrant, Antonio Rodriguez, was accused of killing an Anglo ranching woman near Rocksprings, Texas. A mob took him from the jail and burned him at the stake, prompting official complaints from Mexican consuls, international press coverage, protests in border towns and Mexican cities, and a meeting the next year by Texas Mexicans to protest the denial of their civil rights.

1911: El Primer Congreso Mexicanista
The Idar family—owners of the Spanish-language newspaper, La Cronica—organized a civil rights conference called El Primer Congreso Mexicanista in order to discuss issues affecting the Mexican and Mexican American communities in South Texas. The congress, comprised of dozens of representatives from cities and towns across Texas, met for more than a week, focusing primarily on issues of poverty, racial violence, labor exploitation, inadequate educational opportunities, and gender inequity. Through court cases and later legislation, the congress made short-term progress and long-term impact on the rights of Mexicans and Mexican Americans.

1915: Plan de San Diego
Border turmoil ignited a brutal period of repression. Scattered attacks on ranches, irrigation works, and railroads by ethnic Mexicans quickly developed into a local rebellion in the Valley. They appeared to be the fulfillment of a manifesto entitled the “Plan de San Diego” drafted in South Texas in early 1915. This document called for a “liberating army of all races” composed of Mexicans, blacks, and Indians to kill all white males over age sixteen and overthrow United States rule in Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and California. The newly-freed territory would form an independent republic, perhaps to rejoin Mexico at a future date. The insurrectionists killed only a handful, but prompted indiscriminate reprisals.

September 24, 1915: Murder of Jesús Bazan and Antonio Longoria
Texas Ranger, Captain Henry Ransom casually shot Jesús Bazan and Antonio Longoria. Ransom left the bodies exposed, shocking Rancher Sam Lane (himself a former Ranger) and young Anglo ranch hand Roland Warnock, who helped to bury Bazán and Longoria several days later. That fall, Ransom made a habit of running ethnic Mexicans out of their homes as he patrolled the countryside. At one point he casually reported to Ranger headquarters in Austin that “I drove all the Mexicans from three ranches.”

1917: American entry into WWI
The State expanded the Ranger force, increasing the number of Rangers from seventy-three to more than one hundred and thirty. Moreover, legislation empowered the governor to appoint three “Loyalty Rangers” in each county in order to monitor anti-war activity. In South Texas, these loyalty Rangers participated in an unprecedented assault on Mexican-American voting rights.

1919: Canales Hearings
The most dramatic effort to hold authorities accountable came in early 1919, in what became known as the Canales Hearings. In early 1919, State Representative José Tomás Canales, the only Mexican-American legislator, filed a bill intended to prevent a repeat of the Ranger actions of the previous years by dramatically restructuring the force. To make the case for his bill, Canales filed nineteen charges against Rangers and their commanders. The killings were finally discussed in the public eye.

1929: Formation of United Latin American Citizens
The violence had wider social resonances. It was key to the imposition of a Jim Crow style of segregation on those of Mexican descent, limiting their voting and relegating most to segregated neighborhoods and schools. On the other hand, it also catalyzed a Mexican-American Civil Rights movement. The course of the uprising convinced some key Mexican Americans in South Texas that revolutionary Mexican nationalism was a dead end, and that they were much better off seeking organizing themselves as American citizens with equal access to rights and protections under the U.S. constitution. These figures, including former State Representative José T. Canales, played a key role in the 1929 formation of the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) out of the merger of pre-existing local groups. In subsequent decades, LULAC would fight for equal treatment and the voting and civil rights of Latinos.

Por primera vez en la historia Mexicana se han reunido en las ciudades de Laredo y Nuevo Laredo, en el este de Texas, la Conferencia de Gobernanza, con el fin de discutir asuntos de importancia para la unidad y el desarrollo de nuestro país.
